Yankee Owners File Brief in Mays Case and Ask Permanent Injunction for Pitcher

League Chief Acted to Suit Own Interests

"Mays's Suspension Inspired by Personal Motives":

That Ban Johnson, president of the American League, part owner of the Cleveland Indians and former owner of he Boston Red Soxs, is a sort of baseball behemoth, waving his tail like a cedar, is one of the allegations made by the Yankee legal staff in a brief filed yesterday. The brief was filed in connection with the controversy over Carl Mays, the pitcher obtained by the Yankees from the Boston Red Sox, who was arbitrarily suspended by Johnson. The brief refers to the portrayal of Johnson by his attorney, Stephen Baldwin, as a sort of super-umpire, whose police power, etxending far beyond the horizon of the baseball iteid, comprehended the whole planetary system of the eight clubs.

The brief says in this connection: "Mr. Baldwin's portrayal of his client was—and necessarily was—that of a sort of baseball behemoth, of whom it might well be said in the words of Job:

Lo, his strength is in his lain.

May Condemn Action

The brief asks that the temporary injunction granted by Justice Luce be made permanent and that Johnson's arbitrary action in suspending Mays be given judicial condemnation. The brief charges that the suspension was inspired by personal motives and lays stress on the admission of Johnson during the examination that there was some feeling existing between himself and Harry H. Frazee, present owner of the Boston Red Sox, which formerly were owned by Johnson.

It is also argued that Johnson is heavily interested at present in the Cleveland baseball club and that while the Cleveland club was negotiating for the services of Mays Johnson took no action but waited until Mays was purchased by the Yankees, who were then competing with Johnson's club in the pennant race.

The brief announces the intention of Comiskey, Ruppert, Huston and Frazee to resist the further despotism of the baseball octopus, after quoting John Philpot Curran, to the effect that "it is the common fate of the indelent to see their rights become a prey to the active."

Plan to Annoy Octopus Plan to Annoy Octopus

To show that the "Big Three" clubs will be active at the flank of the octopus from now on, the brief says; "This sentiment is both the reason and the text of this suit. It expresses the determination of the three largest and wealthiest clubs in the American League to resist this fresh encroachment which, if it succeeds, would definitely place their properties, their reputations and their liberties at the mercy of one man, who, not by accident, has come to be known as the czar of baseball."

The brief denounces the practice of using umpires as gumshoe men to dig up scandal for Johnson. It refers to Johnson's order to Umpire Hildebrand to listen at the bench and dugouts for gossin concerning the Mays case. Legally, the brief maintained, Johnson had no power under the league constitution to suspend Mays. Jurisdiction in the case rested solely with the Boston club.

EDDIE CICOTTE

Sox Cast-Off Develops Into Most Formidable Pitcher in Major Leagues

By Ray McCarthy

The Boston Red Sox, taking stock

They figured thusly because Cicotte had been sort of an in-and-outer in his five years with the Roston team, and it wasn't likely that he would ever improve much. The climate of the Windy City, or the sting of being east aside, must have had an influence on the stocky Frenchman.

He went along smoothly enough after landing at Chicago. But wise Eddie was doing more than time with the Sox. He studied the batters in his spare moments, invented new stuff, perfected his central and bettered himself in every respect.

Red Strength

They have shown the most powerful offensive in their league since April.

With Roush, Daubert, Groh and others they have both power and speed—a well-developed attack that has broken through consistently. Their club average has circled around .270 all season, which is no feather-lined assault.

They have also put upon display a game brand of attack, the sort that tears in at the main moment and beats the other entry to the rush. The two clubs together stand as the leading representatives of the two leagues in offensive strength, so there is no "hitless wonder" tone to the cecasion. Nothing but good pitching will stop the Reds. No semi-class effort will hold them at bay.

Then he blessomed cut. Starting in 1916, he began to burn up the league not with speed, but with his great "comeback." He grined widespread fame as the "shine ball" artist. But ters seemed unable to fathom his new freak delivery. Cicotte was largely responsible for the world's series title going to the White Sox in 1917, and is mostly the cause of keeping the Sox in front this year. He is going better than ever at present, having twenty-cight victories with only seven losses charged against him. Cicotte is Gleason's ace for the coming world's series.

But for all that they can't hit with the White Sox. A club that can slug the Tigers with Cobb, Veach, Heilman and Flagstead in harness than completed a standard production of the well-known punch.

The Balance of Power

The Red attack doesn't carry the same balance shown by the White Sox, who in this respect are unequalled.

Chapter Two

Offensive Strength

The ball club strongest in attack has won on the average two world's series out of three played.

No one would ever accuse the White Sox of 1906 or the Braves of 1914 of being stouter at bat than the Cubs or the Athletics, whom they overthrew. But for all that they won with comparative case, taking eight of the ten games required to round out the decision.

The Tigers of 1909 looked better at bat than the Pivates, yet the latter predominated. So, superior batting strength yields no set-up. It is merely that much of a margin to work on, other details being in the

The line-up that will face Ursinus Saturday has now been practically determined on, and with Troup and Mount as tackles, Duff and Robb as guards, and Runyon at centre, the Scarlet forwards average 156 pounds from tackle to tackle, and still have plenty of speed. Storek and Francisco are the regular ends.

One of the least features of the Scarlet eleven this year is the wealth of substitutes. The second team is just as heavy as the 'marsity, and the practice scremmages put up just as hard a light as Raigers expects from Ursinus. There is an expecially large supply of backled men at hand.

"Budge" Garrett the Indian star, who was all American guard in 1817, probably will not play Saturday owing to acholastic work, but he is expected to be with the team the rest of the season. He will probably replace Duff, who may be shifted to Troup's place at tackle.
